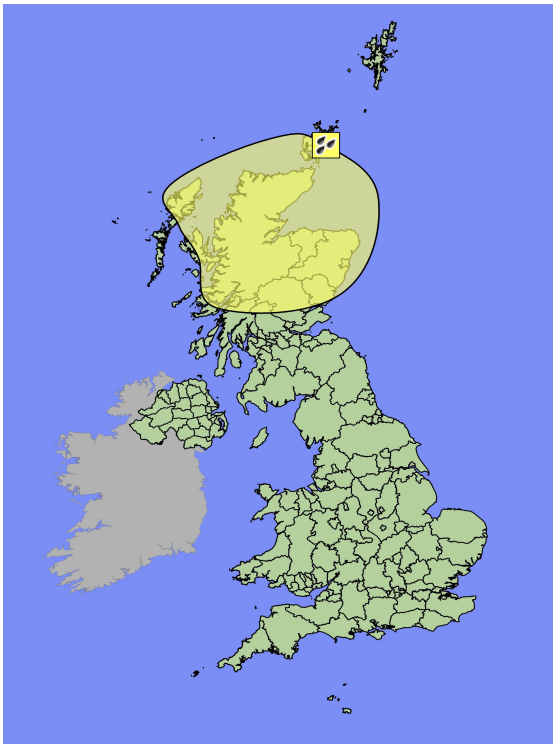
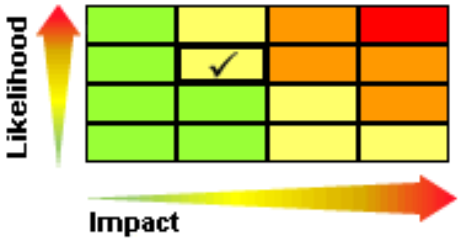
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An area of low pressure will continue to move north across Scotland through today, bringing strong to gale force winds and further spells of heavy rain, which could produce another 10-20 mm in places and as much as 30 mm over the northwest Highlands. The rain will clear from the south later in the day.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 12:00 on Sun, 23rd Dec 2012 until 20:00 on Sun, 23rd Dec 2012

Further spells of heavy rain will continue across parts of central and northern Scotland, gradually easing from the south. The rain will be accompanied by strong to gale force winds.

The public should be aware of the risk of further flooding in places.
